

Alex Henley

Eastman Ambassador Artist

Alex Henley's music doesn't fit neatly into a single genre box—and that's exactly the point. Across the music, he leans into the syncopated pulse of funk, the vulnerability of soul, the interplay of jazz, and the grit of blues/rock. This is a blend that feels lived-in and familiar, the product of years spent absorbing different musical dialects and weaving it all into something personal.

Alex speaks about his songs like they're entries from an old journal; each from a certain moment in his life. The arrangements are rich, often anchored by warm basslines, understated horn parts, and a sense of space that lets every instrument shine. "I wanted to make music that feels new, but also nostalgic," he says.

Alex isn't rushing to flood the airwaves or chase viral moments. Instead, he's letting the music find its audience in real time, show by show. It's an approach that mirrors the way his songs are built: steady, with attention to detail, and letting the groove speak for itself.

In recent months, Henley's been performing regularly with Austin blues legend Soul Man Sam, an experience he calls "a masterclass in feel and timing." But it's clear that his focus remains on carving out a space that's entirely his own - one where the boundaries between genres blur and the song always comes first.
